Accessibility is a Civil Right

Many Georgians lack access to technology. This lack of access can limit participation in many activities, with civic engagement being no exception. Since 2019, Fair Count has installed technology hubs consisting of computers and WiFi devices into more than 150 locations throughout Georgia, as a resource for communities to access technology.

Fair Count asks all participating churches, if available, to join us in our efforts to ensure that every community has Broadband access by allowing use of their WiFi. It is suggested that participating churches change the church marquee to reflect that WiFi access is available and that parishioners should make a plan to vote. Community members will remain in vehicles and have safe, no contact access to the church's WiFi. In addition to drawing community maps, here are some other ways that the church's WiFi could be used for the weekend: school related needs, employment search and social service-related needs.
